

Abstract

A photodetector of the invention is characterized by having a plurality of detector elements that are arranged over a light-transparent substrate and are connected in parallel. A foldable portable communication tool having two display portions of the 5 invention is characterized by including one photodetector which includes a plurality of detector elements connected in parallel.